Food on a Stick: 12 Killer Skewers

By Danya Henninger
November 12, 2013

Generally speaking, food on a stick is a genius proposition. You don't have to worry about silverware or even a plate - the skewer takes care of both holding the food and transporting it to your mouth. While not everything is suited to the serving method, most foods can be adapted to it, even a burrito (really, check out this 1983 patent filing). We found 12 delicious skewers available right now in Philly, so put down the fork and click through to see the tastefully impaled goods.

S'mores at Max Brenner

It turns out you can get real, honest-to-goodness s'mores any day of the year at the Center City outpost of this chocolate haven. Spear your marshmallow and hold it over the semi-open flame on your own personal grill till it's melting, then dip it in one of four sauces and sandwich it between graham crackers. Or just do like when you were a kid and pull off the toasty outer shell, then head back to the fire for another round ($20.25, serves two; 215-344-8150).
